

Columbus Regional / Midtown Medical Center

Hospital Information

(Please include the following: number of inpatient beds, trauma level, specialty services and any other pertinent information)

Midtown Medical Center traces its roots back to 1836 when the Columbus, GA hospital was a small wooden building on the banks of the Chattahoochee River. Today, the 583-licensed bed, acute care hospital meets the health and medical needs of a diverse community with a wide array of services, many of which are available nowhere else in the region.

Columbus Regional Health includes two hospitals – Midtown Medical Center and Northside Medical Center . The system also includes the John B. Amos Cancer Center, Columbus Regional Medical Group with multiple locations, two MyCare Urgent Care Centers and three retail pharmacies.

The system also includes a Family Medicine Residency Program, as well as an American Society of Health-System Pharmacists-accredited pharmacy residency program. The Family Medicine Residency Program at Midtown Medical Center became the first in Georgia in 1972 and is one of the first in the southeastern United States.

Services at Midtown Medical Center include the region’s only advanced maternity services and neonatal intensive care unit (NICU); a Children’s Hospital, which includes a pediatric intensive care unit (PICU); a growing program of women’s services; a neuroscience center for spine and stroke care; emergency services, including a pediatric emergency department; and the region’s only trauma center.

Since 1984, Northside Medical Center (formerly Hughston Hospital) in Columbus has provided excellence in clinical quality and patient satisfaction. This licensed 100-bed, acute-care hospital provides a full range of orthopedic and rehabilitative services. This facility is nationally recognized for delivering outstanding clinical quality accompanied by the highest levels of customer service and a growing array of additional medical and surgical services. The hospital provides a full range of services for knee and hip joint replacement, spine treatment and surgery, hand and upper extremity, advanced reconstructive and trauma surgery, and physical rehabilitation services.

Building upon its 100th percentile ranking in nationally reported clinical process and patient satisfaction scores (CMS Hospital Value-Based Purchasing Program Simulated Hospital Report, June 2012), Northside Medical Center has received state approval to develop an Emergency Department. Once completed, Northside Medical Center's will be able to further meet the needs of north Columbus and Harris County for generations to come.
